2. Purpose
This is an introductory course in creative writing. It exposes students to various genres of creative writing—Creative Nonfiction, Drama, Fiction, and Poetry—the major forms within those genres, and the craft elements that underpin all creative writing. The course will also guide them in creating short works of their own. Additionally, the course will further help them build on the critical reading and analytical skills learned in EN 101, and develop a critical lens through which to view creative writing texts. Lastly, the course will further refine the revision and editing skills learned in EN 101. The aim is to help students broaden and deepen their creative faculties, become better descriptive and narrative writers, and equip them with the fundamental skills of the creative writing craft with which to assess and develop works of creative writing.

D. Catalogue Course Description
   This is a course in imaginative writing. Major elements of creative writing are studied, including character development, point of view, conflict, and setting. The major genres of creative writing (creative nonfiction, drama, fiction, and poetry) are presented through lectures, models, class discussion, regular reading and writing assignments, and both peer and instructor feedback. The course can also serve those who teach or plan to teach creative writing. Prerequisite: a “C” grade or higher in EN 101. Offered spring semester 2014.

E. Degree or Certificate Requirements Met by Course
This course satisfies elective credits for the A.A. in Liberal Arts, and Arts and Humanities credits for the General Education Requirements of the following programs: A.A.S in Business Administration (Accounting, Business Management, and Computer Applications Emphasis); A.A.S in Hospitality Management; and A.S. in Natural Resource Management.

F. Course Activities and Design
1. Through lectures, class discussions, small-group work, and extensive reading selections, students will be introduced to the craft elements of creative writing: Image, Voice, Character, Setting, and Story. Students will be given ample opportunity through in-class and homework writing assignments to apply and hone their execution of each craft element. Examples of craft elements will also be presented in the context of the various creative writing genres in which they are utilized.

2. After laying the groundwork with craft elements, the class will then examine their application in each genre as bridge to further exploration of each respective genre. Each genre will be discussed in terms of its literary conventions, and reading selections will be used to illustrate the application (or contravention) of literary conventions. Students will also use this time to develop an understanding of how to critically read and analyze creative texts. They will develop a lexicon and process by which to analyze creative texts, with an eye on using such skills in peer review and editing, and revising their own work.

3. With each genre, students will be assigned both shorter developmental writing exercises to practice application of elements specific to that genre, and a complete short composition or work in that genre. Additional instruction on the writing process for each genre will also be provided. Students will be required to rewrite each composition or work to further reinforce the vital components of feedback, revision, and editing, with the help of both peer feedback and instructor feedback.

4. The course will culminate in a student-selected final project from one of the genres discussed during the course. This project will be longer than any of the previous genre-specific compositions or works, but can be an expansion of a previous assignment. As students work toward completing their long projects, the course will also cover the practical applications of creative writing, including jobs that rely on creative writing skills, as well as possible outlets for their creative writing projects for class and beyond.

4. Course Prerequisite(s); Concurrent Course Enrollment; Required English/Mathematics Placement Level(s)
