1. Department
   Languages and Humanities

2. Purpose
   This course was developed to address the need for citizens and residents to better understand diverse folkloric and mythological traditions present in the Commonwealth of the Northern Mariana Islands and throughout the world. This course helps students recognize universal story patterns that appear in myths, fairy tales, folk tales, urban legends, and in the cinema. Recognizing these universal patterns fosters critical thinking skills relevant to comprehending the contents of other humanities and social science courses such as philosophy, literature, fine arts, history, and psychology. This course also prepares students to be more understanding and tolerant of the culturally specific story patterns and belief systems of other cultures.
