2. Purpose
   PS 110 provides an introduction to the American system of democratic government, in both historical and contemporary contexts. Principles of Democratic Institutions or its equivalent is a standard component of the General Education curriculum at any accredited U.S. postsecondary institution, and it fulfills a General Education requirement at most such institutions.

   The course aims to help students better understand the actions, issues, and policy decisions facing the U.S. government, the states, and other members of the U.S. political family, and its citizens by examining these issues from the perspective of how they have evolved over time. It explores how America is governed today by looking not just at present behavior but also at the intentions of the Framers of the Constitution, and how their intentions have been implemented (or not implemented) over the succeeding years.

   In addition to perennial questions raised by the Framers, PS 110 examines issues that the Framers could never have envisioned and considers how the basic institutions of government have responded to these new demands. This course also examines the relationship and the differences between the U.S. government and the government of the Commonwealth of the Northern Mariana Islands.
